Our Story

The building known as the Luca Lanai was originally built in 1901 as a Cargo Depot. For the Jingle Navigation Company as they expanded their trade route and Jingle Cruise Business through the then Manzanita Outpost and beyond. As the years went on and the outpost grew into the Manzanita Village, the once oversized cargo depot had grown too small to be able to effectively serve the region. With a new depot built down the river and the old cargo hold closed, the building fell into disrepair. A blight on the square of the otherwise bustling Manzanita Village square.

After over a decade of abandonment, one day a strange man rode into town on a Vespa, claiming to be from the tiny coastal town of Portorosso, Italy. Seeing the great potential in the abandoned depot, he purchased it from the J.N.C. and made it his home base while he explored the wilds beyond. Each time he would return to the village he would invite fellow travelers and locals alike to hang out in the depot and hear his "talls" from across the globe. Eventually, the spot became so popular he decided to keep it open year round, a permanent club house for anyone and everyone with a taste for mystery, romance, and adventure.
